ORGANIZATION AWARD WINNER

BLACK PEOPLE RIDE BIKES

Black People Ride Bikes (BPRB) is a Baltimore-based cycling and advocacy organization of black cyclists in every age bracket, from children to adults. The organization is made up of both casual riders and avid cyclists, who regularly participate in cycling events throughout the country.

This organization was founded by three avid cyclists, Shaka Pitts, Nia Reed-Jones, and Milt Sharp as a way to introduce people of black diaspora to the many benefits of cycling they have experienced firsthand. Their experiences taught them cycling can be a useful form of self-care, healthcare, and exploration. BPRB advocates for improving cycling conditions in the Greater Baltimore Region and beyond. Their main goal is to make cycling more accessible regardless of socioeconomic background, ethnicity, or experience level.
